The Breast Cancer Charities of America (BCCA) leads the quest to provide research funding into non-traditional cancer prevention and treatment options. They have a specific emphasis on understanding the link between nutrition and breast cancer. Conducting research to demonstrate required changes in the American diet ranks as their top priority.

BCCA is a pioneer in educating the public about breast cancer prevention, early detection, treatment, survival and quality of life. It is the only non-profit bringing the "integrated cancer care" message to the women of America. Integrated cancer care brings the body, mind and spirit to the cancer prevention, treatment and recovery effort by combining oncology, nursing, psychology, sociology, nutrition, exercise physiology, spirituality and more. Integrated cancer care is the best promise for preventing, treating and surviving breast cancer.

These individuals have donated to help conduct research on the link between breast cancer and nutrition, to educate the public and health care professionals on integrated cancer care and to support the "Help Now Fund," which provides food, clothing, shelter, transportation, mammograms and more to women who are uninsured or in need.

These donors are proven responsive to health, cancer and women's rights offers.
